Dear Mr. Boykin:

I cannot tell you how fine it makes one feel in the midst of all our problems to receive a wonderful letter such as those you have just written to me and to Foster. Your kind offer of continued assistance is certainly appreciated.

It will be a great pleasure to see you again upon your return to Washington.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely,

My dear Mr. Dulles:

I am enclosing you a copy of a letter I am writing to your hard-hitting, brilliant brother, who is doing such a grand job for this nation and the world; and you are doing the same thing.

I enjoyed being with you the other night, and when we return to Washington I hope we can see more of each other. Please always let me know when, how and where I can be helpful in the great work that you are doing.

With every good wish, I am

Honorable John Foster Dulles
Secretary of State
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mr. Secretary:

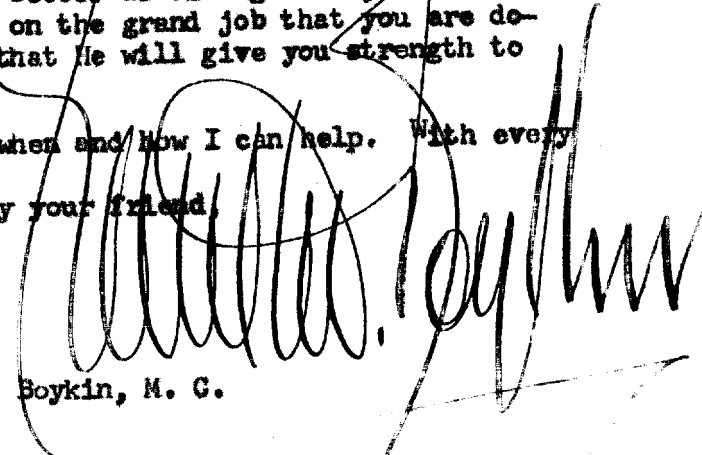

I just want to congratulate you on the splendid job you are doing with so many countries, and especially Germany. I had dinner at the German Embassy with our German Ambassador. Another great Dulles was there -- Allen Dulles.

Chancellor Adenauer made a profound impression on all of us and he certainly said some wonderful things not only about you, but your brother and so many of the great men of this nation. If you can only finish up this great matter that you have done such wonderful work on with Germany and France, then if we can only get Japan, just like you are getting the other great countries, I think we will have some peace. If you can do that you will go down in history as one of the greatest men on earth; I mean from George Washington on down the line.

I know how hard you have worked and I have often wondered how you stand it. I have a kinsman that is with your great State Department. His name is Sam Boykin, and he was telling me that you are the hardest worker we have ever had in that Department, and he and Jack Pourifoy, who worked together so many years, certainly should know. You have been doing a good job, but it seems you are getting better as time goes on, and I congratulate you and all of the people on the grand job that you are doing, and I pray to the Great Good One that he will give you strength to carry on.

God bless you, and always let me know when and how I can help. With every good wish, I am

Sincerely your friend,

Frank W. Boykin, M. C.
